Acknowledging contributions from pharmaceutical companies

Traffic light guidelines for MS organisations
These guidelines are to support MS organisations when deciding and negotiating how to acknowledge financial contributions from pharmaceutical companies (referred to here as Companies). They do not apply to paid advertisements (which are legal in some countries). These guidelines should be read alongside MSIF’s ‘Policy and practices in relationships with the healthcare industry’.

Whilst MS organisations need to comply with national (marketing/sponsorship) regulations, these guidelines are designed to help MS organisations further consider how best they can provide information in a transparent and independent manner whilst acknowledging the financial support they receive from pharmaceutical companies.

To safeguard against undue (perceived or real) influence by companies, MS organisations need to retain control and independence over the content, design and development of the information they produce.

The guidelines can apply to a wide range of information materials such as...

- printed and digital resources
- websites
- event banners or posters
- live-stream events
- webinars
- videos
Top tips for maintaining independence when working with Companies

- Understand the national (marketing/sponsorship) regulations in your country.
- Have a consistent approach to branding. This will make it easier for you explain your preferences to the Company, using real examples from your work.
- Plan your activities early!
- Try to have more than one Company funding a project, where possible, to help maintain your independence.
- Ensure you have a written agreement with the Company to outline what you have agreed.
- Have early discussions with your funders about branding. This should include detail about the size, prominence and location of your logo and theirs.
- Demonstrate your ownership by always ensuring your own logo is on the material.
- Do not use Companies’ channels or video conferencing accounts – use your own account, even if you fund it through a Company grant. This will help to maintain editorial control and independence, and build trust with your audience.
- It is best that you get a grant and produce the materials yourself rather than delegating to the Company to produce part or all of the materials.

Traffic light guidelines

- Ideal
  This is the ideal situation to aim for.

- Acceptable
  This isn’t the best situation but it’s still acceptable, at the discretion of the MS organisation.

- Avoid
  This situation should be avoided at all costs.
Further resources

For more information and support, you can contact your nearest MS organisation. If you’re not already in contact with them, use the ‘find support near you’ tool on MSIF’s website to see where your closest MS organisation is:

www.msf.org/findsupportnearyou/

Useful links

Mindfulness

Talking to your employer about your MS
https://mssociety.ca/managing-newly-diagnosed/talking-about-ms/employers

Exercises and yoga
https://www.mssociety.org.uk/care-and-support/everyday-living/staying-active/simple-exercises-for-ms

Acknowledgments

We are very grateful to Company 1 and Company 2 for their support of this booklet.

Acceptance of this support does not constitute endorsement by our MS organisation of these Companies’ products.
In some situations you may find you need more flexibility when negotiating this acknowledgement. At your discretion, you may want to agree to use the logo of the Company, alongside a message of thanks for their financial support.

Even if you do decide to use the Company’s logo, you as the MS organisation will have the final decision about the relative prominence, size or dominance of the Company’s logo and your own.

As a guideline, you should aim to ensure that the Company logo is smaller and less prominent than your own logo. This will help to avoid the misconception that the Company had editorial control over the material.

Example:
Avoid

There are a few situations that should be avoided when acknowledging a Company.

- The Company should not promote its products or services as part of the acknowledgment or anywhere in the material.
- Do not allow the Company to have any influence over the content or editing of the material.
- Do not include the Company’s logo in the materials on its own, without accompanying text to make clear that they supported the project rather than led it.
- Do not include text that recommends the Company or its products to people with MS (unless it is for paid advertisements, which are legal in some countries).
- Do not send out joint invitations from you and the Company. Even if you have full control and independence over the content, this can be perceived as co-design and collaboration, which can damage your organisation’s reputation.

Text is needed to clarify that the company supported the project rather than led it.
Various terms can be used to describe funding agreements with Companies. This section gives a few definitions for some of these terms, however it is important to be aware that they may have different meanings in different sectors, organisations, regions and countries. If in doubt, always ask for clarification.

- Sponsored by
  A commercial arrangement where a Company pays to support an event, product, project or other initiative in return for some sort of commercial benefit, usually branding or prominence of some kind. In many countries there are tax implications of this kind of arrangement.

- Restricted or charitable grant
  A grant from a donor that must be spent on the project or initiative for which it was intended, often with other project-specific requirements (e.g. expected deliverables). Most grants from companies to patient organisations fall into this category, usually as a charitable grant. Please also note that some companies refer to their contracts as ‘sponsorship agreements’ even though they are charitable grants.

- Unconditional grant
  MSIF suggests avoiding this term, as it can be misleading. It refers to there being no requirement to promote the Company or its products through the project or initiative it is funding. However, in reality, there are still conditions because the money must be used for the project or initiative for which it was intended (which is the same as a restricted grant).

- Donation
  An unrestricted grant to a non-profit organisation, for use in whatever way the organisation decides is appropriate in line with its goals.

- Funded by
  A project or initiative that is fully funded by the named donor.

- Supported by
  A project or initiative that is at least partly funded by the named donor.

- In collaboration with
  A project or initiative that is co-designed and delivered by the patient organisation and the Company, in partnership.